Its stated aim is to "glorify the Prophet Muhammad and uphold the teachings of the Quran and Sunnah." The organization operates in Pakistan and currently counts close to one million members. Anjuman-e-Tanzeem offers a day-long Islamic training on Saturdays, as well as an evening training every week. The training is not mandatory and those who attend train on a voluntary basis. A formal public training is also offered on a monthly basis. The training material is based on the Islamic literature. Its free of cost. Background The institution was founded in 1967 under the name of Al-Hadeeth Institute, Urdu Academy, by the Islamic scholar Maulana Maudoodi, who also served as its president for over twenty years. Its objectives were to disseminate Islamic teachings, provide a scientific basis for the Islamic faith and carry out charitable works. Anjuman-e-Tanzeem, started in 1970, is part of the Anjuman-e-Tanzeem group of organizations, and operates under the same management and leadership. Anjuman-e-Tanzeem has also been involved in its branches in other countries. Activities Anjuman-e-Tanzeem is involved in educational and social activities, including "providing religious, moral and spiritual guidance to the community and spreading awareness in the masses about the teachings of Islam and its importance." Its activities include visiting and counseling the sick, elderly and uneducated; organizing religious classes and events; campaigning for the rights of women and other marginalized groups; and setting up training centers for the community. Controversy The organization has been involved in several controversies. It has been accused of backing Islamism and the fundamentalist agenda in Pakistan, and has also been accused of "blaming the victims" of a child molestation incident. It has been criticized for not cooperating with the government in the fight against 82157476af
